About the project

The main objective of KushalMaa research study is to assess the effectiveness of a culturally-tailored mobile interactive education and social support group intervention to supplement standard postpartum care activities in comparison to standard care alone on health-related behaviours and health outcomes in a randomized controlled trial among 2100 postpartum Indian women living in 3 geographically diverse Indian states (namely Madhya Pradesh, Punjab, and Maharashtra) to estimate the impact on maternal and neonatal health-related knowledge, health-related behaviours, and health outcomes. The investigators also seek to characterize mechanisms of impact including knowledge, social support, self-efficacy, and behaviour change, and determine the cost-effectiveness.

More details on the study are available <https://clinicaltrials.gov/study/NCT05268588>
